Preface

The Peninsula Model for Primary Health Planning (the Peninsula Model) is a catchment-based partnership between a range of health and community service organisations, key stakeholders, consumers, carers and communities. Working collaboratively, the partnership identifies the health needs of Frankston and Mornington Peninsula communities and develops effective service responses to meet those needs. The Model encompasses goals of improving service coordination, health promotion, early intervention and client experience in each priority area (Peninsula Model 2013).

Based on a population health approach, the model wraps the collective effort of providers around agreed health priorities to address service gaps for the catchment. This collective effort maximises impact and makes efficient use of resources through integrated planning, reduced duplication of effort, and shared ownership of processes and outcomes.

The Peninsula Model priorities have been determined by population health data and through a comprehensive engagement process. The priorities are:

- Aboriginal Health
- Ageing Well
- Alcohol and Other Drugs
- Vulnerable Children and Families
- Chronic Disease Management
- Mental Health (youth, homelessness)
- Alcohol and other drugs

Alliances comprise of health and community services private practitioners and consumers. There are seven Alliances that correspond with a health priority, and a further Alliance, eHealth Alliance supports electronic connectivity and communication between providers. All Alliances have a number of working groups that focus on specific Alliance action issues or areas.

The Prevention and Better Health Alliance was established in August 2013 to coordinate the health promotion and prevention work within the catchment. The Prevention and Better Health Alliance has a commitment to working towards addressing the social determinants of health through a primary prevention approach. The social determinants of health can be considered the root causes of health and disease.

The Prevention and Better Health Alliance priorities are:

1. The prevention of violence against women and their children
2. Smoking cessation and prevention
3. The primary prevention of chronic disease

The Prevention of Violence against Women and their Children working group was established in February 2014 out of the Prevention and Better Health Alliance. It is coordinated by Women’s Health in the South East (WHISE) with representatives from a range of services and sectors across the two local government areas.

The Preventing Violence against Women and their Children working group was established to drive the development of a catchment wide strategy on the primary prevention of violence against women and their children with a particular focus on

- Sharing and building upon existing resources and evidence;
- Developing new tools and resources;
- Building the capacity of internal and external agencies to work within the primary prevention sphere;
- Implementing the strategy action plan using a collaborative approach.

During the planning and development stages, the working group included representatives from:

- Women’s Health in the South East
- Frankston/Mornington Peninsula Primary Care Partnership
- Frankston-Mornington Peninsula Medicare Local
- Peninsula Health
- Family Life
- Frankston City Council
- Mornington Peninsula Shire

CREATING

SAFETY, EQUALITY AND RESPECT

IN OUR COMMUNITY

A CATCHMENT WIDE STRATEGY TO PREVENT VIOLENCE AGAINST WOMEN AND THEIR CHILDREN
2014-2017

GOAL

To create a community that is safe and accessible for all women and their children.

VISION

For women and their children to live free from violence; feel safe and respected, valued and heard in their relationships, workplaces and within the community.

We strive for every woman, man and child in the Frankston-Mornington Peninsula catchment to have equal access to opportunities that enable them to reach their potential and participate fully in all aspects of their lives.

OBJECTIVES

1. Encourage organisations to work collaboratively across sectors and settings within the catchment to collectively address the key determinants of Violence against Women and their Children.

2. Increase the capacity of organisations to understand the primary prevention of Violence against Women and their Children and commit to implementing actions within their agency that promotes gender equality and respectful relationships.

3. Increase the community's capacity to understand the primary prevention of Violence against Women and their Children and take appropriate action.

ACTIONS

• Sign a Statement of Intent and signatories display commitment publicly.
• Commit to workforce development on gender equity and the Prevention of Violence against Women and their Children.
• Organisations incorporate gender equity into existing relevant policies.
• Provide staff within each organisation access to resources on Prevention of Violence against Women and their Children.
• Promote and support Prevention of Violence against Women and their Children campaigns as appropriate.

OPTIONAL ACTIONS

• Ensure that all communications regarding violence against women and their children have a focus on gender equity.
• Participate in an annual community event organised by the Peninsula Model’s Preventing Violence against Women and their Children working group that focuses on gender equity and preventing violence against women and their children e.g. 16 Days of Activism.
• Ongoing involvement and/or support of the Peninsula Model’s Preventing Violence against Women and their Children working group.

WE, THE FOLLOWING ORGANISATIONS COMMIT TO THE ABOVE GOAL, VISION, OBJECTIVES AND WILL TAKE ACTION TO PREVENT VIOLENCE AGAINST WOMEN AND THEIR CHILDREN
The Creating Safety, Equality and Respect in our Community: a Catchment Wide Strategy to Prevent Violence against Women and their Children 2014-2017 Statement of Intent is a formal and public commitment of organisations in the Frankston and Mornington Peninsula region to take action in the prevention of violence against women and their children. By signing the Statement of Intent, these organisations display their commitment to the goal, vision, objectives and actions of this strategy.

Signatories will be expected to implement the activities set out in the Creating Safety, Equality and Respect in our Community: a Catchment Wide Strategy to Prevent Violence against Women and their Children 2014-2017 action plan in the most appropriate way for their organisation and with the intention to reach the targets listed.

The public commitment of signing onto the Creating Safety, Equality and Respect in our Community: a Catchment Wide Strategy to Prevent Violence against Women and their Children 2014-2017 and action plan is an expression by each organisation of sincere determination to work together in the important task of the prevention of violence against women and children in the Frankston and Mornington Peninsula catchment.
Vision
For women and their children to live free from violence; feel safe and respected, valued and heard in their relationships, workplaces and within the community. We strive for every woman, man and child in the Frankston-Mornington Peninsula catchment to have equal access to opportunities that enable them to reach their potential and participate fully in all aspects of their lives.

Purpose
The Preventing Violence against Women and their Children strategy is a platform for organisations within the Frankston-Mornington Peninsula catchment to share and build on skills, knowledge and resources in a collaborative effort to focus on primary prevention of violence against women and their children.

This collective approach maximises impact and makes efficient use of resources through integrated planning, reduced duplication of effort, and shared ownership of processes and outcomes. The action plan will support work currently underway and provide opportunities to engage in new practical and strategic prevention initiatives. The Strategy will focus on addressing particular determinants of men’s violence against women and their children with a strong focus on Gender Equity within three key domains: society, organisation/community and individual.

Introduction
Violence against women and their children is a National issue which causes long-term health and economic impacts to the individual, workplaces community and society. While violence against women is serious and prevalent, the evidence tells us that it is preventable. Primary Prevention aims to stop violence before it occurs through addressing and challenging prevailing gender norms and power structures and focuses on promoting equal and respectful relationships between men and women at the individual, community, organisational and societal level. Through the Peninsula Model’s Preventing Violence against Women and their Children working group, Creating Safety, Equality and Respect in our Community is a three year catchment strategy aimed at preventing violence against women and their children in Frankston-Mornington Peninsula 2014-2017. The strategy provides a primary prevention approach to violence against women and their children which complements the work being done in both secondary and tertiary levels within the catchment. As often, restricted resources, time pressures and short-term funding cycles have at times meant that actions to prevent violence against women and their children has been limited in sustainability, scope and reach. The strategy will be implemented through a collaborative approach through the Peninsula Model across Local Government, Community and Women’s Health Services, Primary Care Partnership, Medicare Local and other key agencies. It aims to build capacity for internal and external agencies working with the primary prevention sphere, develop new tools and resources and to share and build upon already existing resources and evidence within the catchment. The strategy will aim to strengthen existing partnerships through identifying opportunities to share skills, knowledge and resources that will enhance the capacity within the catchment to mutually reinforce primary prevention of violence against women and their children.

The term ‘violence against women and their children’ is often used interchangeably with ‘family violence’, ‘intimate partner violence’ or ‘domestic violence’. For the strategy the term ‘violence against women and their children’ will be used to reflect the gendered patterns of victimisation and perpetration, and to ensure that we can respond to women’s experiences of violence in a range of contexts. The term also reflects current usage in national, state and local policies and good practice initiatives.

The Strategy and action plan refers to violence against women and their children however the primary focus will be on preventing violence against women with consideration of the flow on effects to children.

As the research shows, children who experience trauma as a result of witnessing violence are likely to experience developmental delays and poor health outcomes, and this risk increases with multiple traumatic experiences. Witnessing violence is also a significant risk factor for young men becoming perpetrators of violence in the future (National Crime Prevention 2001). The prevention of violence against women has positive effects for children and young people and helps to reduce the prevalence of violence over generations (Baim & Guthrie 2012).

Although the focus of this Strategy is on preventing men’s violence against women and their children, we recognise that this is not the only form of violence in our society and that all forms of violence are unaccepted and will not be tolerated. Violence can occur, for example within same sex relationships, and men can also experience violence. Whilst men can also be victims of violence, the nature of this violence presents itself in fundamentally different ways to that experienced by women. Men are more likely to be physically assaulted within the public sphere by other men with whom they have no personal relationship with, whereas women are more likely to experience violence within their own homes and from a person that is known to them. Therefore the primary focus of this Strategy is on addressing the significant and widespread issue of men’s violence against women and their children.

For the purpose of this strategy a woman is referred to as someone who was born female and/or who identifies as being a woman (World Health Organisation 2014) and children are referred to as those aged 0 – 18 as defined under the Children, Youth and Families Act 2005 (Australian Government 2005).

Background

Defining violence against women and their children

The United Nations (1993) defines violence against women (and their children) as:

‘Any act of gender-based violence that results in, or is likely to result in, physical, sexual or psychological harm or suffering to women, including threats of such acts, coercion or arbitrary deprivation of liberty, whether occurring in public or private life’.

Violence against women (and their children) is not just physical abuse; there are many different types of violence including psychological, economic, emotional, sexual, social and spiritual abuse (Council of Australian Governments 2012).

Violence against Women and their Children is a Gendered Issue

Women can be perpetrators of violence; however the evidence demonstrates that the overwhelming majority of abuse and violence is perpetrated by men against women (National Council to Reduce Violence against Women and their Children 2009). The greatest risk factor for becoming a victim of violence is, simply, being female (National Council Reduce Violence against Women and their Children 2009).

Some data that highlights the gendered issue of violence includes:

- The number of women being the victim of reported family violence incidents is 77% and women and girls constitute 92% of reported rape incidents (Victoria Police 2009).
- Male intimate partner violence is the leading contributor to death, disability and illness for women aged 15-44 years (VicHealth 2004).
• Compared with male victims of intimate partner violence women are: five times more likely to require medical attention or hospitalisation, five times more likely to report fearing for their lives and five times more likely to be killed by an intimate partner (Mouzos, 1999).

• Almost every week a woman is killed in Australia by a current or previous male partner (Deardon & Jones 2008 & Davies & Mouzos 2007).

• While men are more likely to be physically assaulted by a male stranger, women are more likely to be assaulted by a current and/or previous partner.

Prevalence of Violence Against women and their children

Australian perspective

In Australia, approximately one in three women over the age of 15 years have experienced physical assault, one in five women have experienced sexual assault, and over half of all women have experienced at least one incident of physical or sexual violence in their lifetime (Mouzos & Makkai 2004, Australian Bureau of Statistics 2006).

The Australian Bureau of Statistics [ABS] (2012a) ran Australia’s largest survey on personal safety in 2012. The results showed that 34% of women reported having experienced physical violence since the age of 15 and also 19% of women reported having experienced sexual violence, since the age of 15. Women aged 18 years and over were more likely to have experienced violence since the age of 15 by a known person than by a stranger. An estimated 3,106,500 women had experienced violence by a known person (36% of all women) compared to 1,068,200 women who had experienced violence by a stranger (12% of all women). The most likely type of known perpetrator was a previous partner (15%). This is in contrast to males who were more likely to have experienced violence by a stranger (36%) than by a person known to them and the perpetrator was normally an acquaintance or neighbour. However it needs to be highlighted that due to the private and often intimate nature of violence against women, only a fraction of incidents are reported to the police and that reporting is affected by a number of variables.
Victorian perspective

In Victoria the rate of reported family violence incidents has been on a steady rise. According to the Victorian Police crime statistics in 2013/14, there were 65,393 incidents where police submitted family violence reports. This was 8% higher than the 60,550 reported in 2012/13 (Victoria Police 2014).

In addition there were 2,144 rape offences recorded in 2013/14, an increase of 3.7% on the 2,067 offences recorded in 2012/13. The number of rape offences which were recorded as arising from family incidents increased by 15.6%, and accounted for 34.3% of total rape offences. In addition, female victims accounted for 90% of rape victims (Victorian Police 2014).

These statistics show that the issue of violence against women and their children is an increasing problem within Victoria.

Southern Metropolitan Region perspective

There has also been a rapid increase of family violence within the Southern Metropolitan Region of Melbourne. In 2009/10 there were 9,381 reports of family violence incidents, with the number in 2013/14 increasing considerably to 15,244. This represents a 60% increase in four years across the region.

!Graph showing Family Violence Incident Offences

Table 1: Family Violence Incident Offences reported in the Southern Metropolitan region between 2009/2010 and 2013/2014.
However, when considering the rate of family violence per 100,000, the region sits slightly lower in total reported family violence incidents compared to the Victorian average (1,096.9 per 100,000 compared to the Victorian rate of 1,129.2 per 100,000).

Of the 15,244 reported family violence incidents in 2013/14:

- Children were present at 2,880 cases (360.7 per 100,000, compared to the Victorian rate of 387.6);
- Charges were laid in 2,845 cases (458.4 per 100,000, in contrast to the overall Victorian rate of 507.7); and
- 2,421 Intervention Orders and Family Violence Safety Notices were issued, a rate of 274.9 per 100,000 in the SMR compared to a rate of 295.3 in Victoria.
- The total number of reported rapes in the region was 490, and a further 1,558 sex (non-rape) crimes were also reported. In Victoria there were 37 reported rapes per 100,000 compared to the SMR rate of 35.3 per 100,000.
- 1,558 reported sex (non-rape) crimes in the SMR gave a rate of 112.1 per 100,000 compared to the Victorian rate of 128.9 per 100,000.

* ‘Sex (non-rape)’ is defined all other forms of sexual assault excluding rape.

Frankston-Mornington Peninsula perspective

Violence against women and their children is unacceptably high in our community. Rates of family violence are double the Victorian average in the City of Frankston, which is ranked top of all metropolitan Local Government Areas (LGAs) in the SMR for incidences of family violence (Victorian Police 2014).

In the City of Frankston, reported family violence incidents increased by 53.6% from 1154 in 2009/10 to 1773 in 2013/14 (Victorian Police 2014).

A significant increase in the Mornington Peninsula was also reported during this time which showed a 82% increase in five years from 635 reported cases in 2009/10 to 1157.9 reported cases in 2013/14 (Victorian Police 2014).

Within the City of Frankston it was reported that children were present at 29.3% of family violence callouts and charges were laid at 37.4% of all cases. Between 2008/09 to 2011/12, Seaford saw the most significant increase in the number of family violence callouts, followed by central Frankston and Carrum Downs (Victorian Police 2014).

Population Groups most at risk

Violence against women and their children affects all communities regardless of age, culture, social and economic status. Although it is worth acknowledging that some sub-population groups are at higher risk of either experiencing or perpetrating violence against women or their children (VicHealth 2007). These include:

- Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander women
  - Victorian-based studies have identified that Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander women experience rates of family violence between 5 and 45 times higher than non-indigenous women. This higher prevalence of violence is not part of Indigenous culture, but is understood to be the result of social and economic marginalisation, historical impacts of colonisation and disruption to Indigenous culture in Indigenous culture and identity (VicHealth 2007).
  - Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander women are 35 times more likely to be hospitalised for assaults relating to family violence than other women (Al-Yaman et al 2006).

- Women from culturally and linguistically diverse communities
  - There is conflicting evidence as to whether CALD communities have a higher experience of family violence; however these communities do face greater obstacles in breaking the cycle of violence (InTouch Multicultural Centre against Family Violence 2010).
  - Some members of CALD communities, especially newly-arrived immigrants from non-English speaking backgrounds, have a higher risk of social isolation, uncertainty with legal rights and residency status, unemployment and dependence on family and are exposed to the stresses of recent migration (InTouch Multicultural Centre against Family Violence 2010).
  - Women from culturally and linguistically diverse communities may have difficulty leaving violent relationships due to cultural pressures and might be more dependent on their perpetrator. If recently arrived in Australia they can be particularly vulnerable and reluctant to disclose acts of violence because of threats of deportation relating to their visa conditions (National Council to Reduce Violence against Women and their Children 2009).

- Women with disabilities
  - Women with physical and cognitive disabilities experience higher rates of intimate partner violence than those without disabilities (Brownridge 2006; Cohen et al 2005).
  - A shocking 90 per cent of Australian women with an intellectual disability have been subjected to sexual abuse, with more than two-thirds (68%) having experienced such abuse before the age of 18 (Australian Law Reform Commission 2010; Victorian Women with Disabilities Network Advocacy Information Service 2007).
  - Humiliation, harassment, forced sterilisation, denial of reproductive rights, neglect, denial of mobility and communication devices, withholding of food or medication, threats of institutionalisation, and restrictions to supports and social networks are all forms of violence experienced by women with disabilities. (Salthouse & Frohmader 2004; Women with Disabilities Australia, 2008).

- Younger women
  - For young women, the risk of violence by a male intimate partner can be three-to-four times higher than the risk for women across all other age groups (Young et al 2000).
  - In Australia, findings from the Personal Safety Survey show that in the 12 months prior to the survey, 12 per cent of women aged 18 to 24 years had experienced at least one incident of violence compared to five per cent of women aged 35 to 44 years and four per cent aged 45 to 54 years (ABS 2012a).
  - The National Crime Prevention (2001) estimates that one in seven (14 per cent) young women and girls in Australia (aged 12 to 20 years) have experienced sexual assault or rape.

- Pregnant women
  - Statistics show that women are more likely to experience violence when they are pregnant or have recently given birth. This is a critical, transitional life phase where gender roles and equality become increasingly relevant.
  - Pregnant women appear to be at higher risk of violence than other women, particularly from their partners. More than one-third of Australian women (36%) who have experienced violence by a previous partner, and 15% by a current partner, report that the violence occurred during pregnancy (ABS 2006).

Impacts of Violence against women and their children

Impacts on Women’s Health

Violence against women and their children is a public health problem and a violation of human rights. Violence against women and their children results in major health, social and economic consequences for women, their families, communities and society (Victorian Health Promotion Foundation 2012).

The direct health consequences of gender based violence to women include mental health issues, physical injury, and reproductive health issues (Victorian Health Promotion Foundation 2011). Women who have been exposed to violence report poorer overall physical health than those who have not, and there is evidence that the health impact of violence can persist long after the abuse has stopped (Victorian Health Promotion Foundation 2004).

Impact on Economic and social costs

Violence against women and their children can significantly impact on women’s financial position. It can result in a woman being terminated from her position due to the impact on her work performance or having to leave her current employment due to the impact on her health. It can also affect employment stability and career advancement (Victorian Health Promotion Foundation 2012).

Organisations are also adversely impacted upon by violence against women and their children. Violence against women and their children can increase staff turnover, absenteeism and work productivity. In addition, it also impacts on the employee’s health and wellbeing, staff morale and the organisation’s image and reputation (Victorian Health Promotion Foundation 2012).

Violence against women and their children cost the Australian economy USD$14.7 billion in 2013 (Council of Australian Governments 2009). This includes the pain, suffering and premature mortality costs, production-related costs and second generation costs. The cost of this violence is roughly 1.1% of Australia’s GDP or for every man, woman and child- $6,500 per person. These costs are based on reported violence only.
Socially, violence takes women from families, communities, workforces and broader social involvement. The cost of this to communities is inestimable (Women’s Health in the North 2011).

Impact on homelessness for women and their children

Violence against women and their children is a major cause of homelessness in Australia.

Violence against women and their children makes them vulnerable to homelessness in two ways: firstly, violence removes the sense of safety and belonging associated with the home; and secondly, leaving a violent situation usually requires leaving the family home (Southwell 2002).

Women and children who leave their home because of domestic and family violence experience severe social and personal disruption, poorer housing conditions and financial disadvantage (Spinney & Blandy 2011).

According to the Australian Institute of Health and Welfare (2008), one in five women seeking supported accommodation are escaping violence at home. Domestic and family violence is overwhelmingly the major reason women seek assistance from specialist homelessness services. In addition, more than half of women in domestic related homelessness present to Supported Accommodation Assistance Program services with children (Commonwealth of Australia 2008). Research also shows that children aged 18 years and under account for 26% of Victoria’s homeless populations (Australian Bureau of Statistics 2012b).

Impacts on children

More than one million children in Australia are affected by violence (Australian Domestic and Family Violence Clearinghouse & The University of New South Wales 2011). Children are usually affected where violence or abuse occurs within the family, either as witnesses to the violence, or as victims of violence themselves.

Children often experience serious emotional, psychological, social, behavioural and developmental consequences as a result of experiencing violence (Australian Domestic and Family Violence Clearinghouse & The University of New South Wales 2011). In addition, children who witness intimate-partner violence are at risk of developing anxiety, depression, low self-esteem and physical health complaints. Poor school performance, disobedience and nightmares are also associated with children witnessing violence in their homes (Flood & Fergus 2009).
In Victoria, the Family Violence Protection Act 2008 recognises the vulnerability of children to experiencing violence directed against women, and identifies children’s witnessing of family violence as an example of family violence in and of itself.

Causes of violence against women and their children

Determinants of violence against women and their children

The public health perspective places particular emphasis on primary prevention, or effort to prevent violence against women and their children from occurring in the first place. As with many other contemporary population health issues, the primary prevention of violence against women and their children works by initiating changes to the root causes of the problem. Understanding the underlying determinants of violence against women and their children is therefore integral to taking primary prevention action. From the public health perspective, understanding the determinants of violence against women and their children is therefore the key to doing something about it.

Whilst many factors have been identified to explain its occurrence, there is general agreement on the two most fundamental and underlying causes. These are:

- The unequal distribution of power and resources between men and women. This includes: unequal economic, social and political power between men and women (from the relationship to the societal level) – and the laws and practices that support or fail to address this;
- An adherence to rigidly defined gender roles. This includes: Attitudes and social norms: e.g. rigid gender roles and stereotypes, or seeing violence as a means of asserting male dominance or solving disputes.

Addressing the myths to violence against women and their children

Research has shown that other factors such as alcohol and drug use, poor mental health, socio-economic disadvantage or childhood exposure to violence are neither necessary nor sufficient conditions for violence to occur (VicHealth 2007). While these may be identified as risk or contributing factors, they are excuses and only become significant where they intersect with the underlying determinants of norms and social practices relating to gender roles, identities and stereotypes. Importantly, while these factors are critical to our understanding, they provide neither justification nor excuse for violence (VicHealth 2007; Foundation to Prevent Violence against Women and their Children 2014). Many men affected by these determinants are not violent and these risk factors are not prominent for many men who are violent. Research shows that there are almost even numbers of sober and drunken people who are violent; whereas alcohol and other addictive substances are used by abusers to give themselves permission to be violent (White Ribbon Day 2014). Also the vast majority of violent men are not suffering from a mental illness and would appear to be respectable men who are very much in control. They are represented in all occupations and social classes and the violence is usually only visible within their relationship with their partner and children (White Ribbon Day 2014). To be consistent with contemporary Victorian Government policy and VicHealth, this strategy is based on the principle that men are responsible for learning non-violent behaviour (Statewide Steering Committee to Reduce Family Violence 2005; VicHealth 2007).

Addressing Violence against women and their children

A Primary Prevention Approach

The prevention of violence against women and their children is one of the priorities of the Prevention and Better Health Alliance. ‘The Prevention and Better Health Alliance has a commitment to working towards addressing the social determinants of health through a primary prevention approach. The social determinants of health can be considered the root causes of health and disease’ (Peninsula Model 2013), therefore this working group focuses on the primary prevention of violence against women and their children rather than secondary and tertiary prevention approaches which are already occurring within the catchment (see mapping tool in appendices).

Primary prevention (upstream) seeks to prevent violence before it occurs and is a whole of population approach which is concerned with wider societal and cultural change. Primary prevention is about establishing communities within environments where people live and work which address the underlying causes of violence against women and their children – namely gender and power inequality between men and women. Therefore the focus is not on the violence or the ‘problem,’ rather on shifting the social, structural and cultural norms that facilitate and perpetuate inequalities between men and women that allow violence to occur.

(Agreed working group definition adapted from VicHealth 2007, Frankston/Mornington Peninsula Primary Care Partnership 2010)
Secondary prevention (midstream) addresses the early signs of violence to prevent an act of violence from occurring or escalating. This can target communities, settings, populations or individuals that are classified as ‘at risk’ of developing or experiencing violent behaviours.

Tertiary prevention (downstream) occurs after an act of violence has occurred by implementing measures to prevent it from recurring again in the future.

Primary prevention acts to complement existing education, awareness raising and response based approaches which support those who are at risk or affected by violence.

An Ecological Approach

The ecological approach is widely recognised as being an effective model to understand the complexity of violence against women and their children as it highlights the interplay between 3 specific levels; societal, community/organisational and individual/relationship.

In the context of the prevention of violence against women and their children these:

- Societal level refers to ‘the cultural values and beliefs that shape the other three levels of the social ecology’ (VicHealth 2007, p. 26).
- Community/organisational level refers to the existing social structures that impact on a person and;
- Individual/relationship level recognises an individual’s lived experiences as well as their interactions with others.

By viewing violence against women and their children through this model, it can be seen that individuals exist within two broader structures – community/organisational and societal and that these two structures are what are responsible for the violence occurring at the individual level.
The ecological approach suggests that violence against women and their children stems from cultural and environmental issues rather than individual deficits and pathologies (Australian Women’s Health Network 2014; VicHealth 2007) and provides support for working at all levels, with different population groups, within a range of settings.

Source: VicHealth 2007

The framework below has been adapted from VicHealth’s (2007) Preventing violence against women: a framework for action to reflect this approach.

VicHealth Framework for preventing violence against women and their children

The VicHealth framework is based on an ecological model for understanding violence and is used widely within the Australian context. This model, proposed by the World Health Organization (WHO), recognises that factors influencing violent behaviour or vulnerability to violence lie at multiple and interacting levels of influence – individual/relationship, community and organisational, and societal (VicHealth 2007).

The VicHealth framework provides a collation of research evidence not only demonstrating that violence against women is preventable, but also supporting a spectrum of prevention strategies across a range of contributory factors, as well as across a range of population groups and settings of sites of intervention (VicHealth 2007).

VicHealth’s framework highlights that primary prevention is a long-term endeavour involving major cultural and societal change. Reductions in violence against women and their children are unlikely to be occurred by any single project and needs to be addressed by multi-level approaches (Kwok 2013).
Framework to guide primary prevention of violence against women

KEY DETERMINANTS OF VIOLENCE AND THEME FOR ACTION

PROMOTING EQUAL AND RESPECTFUL RELATIONSHIPS BETWEEN MEN AND WOMEN

- Individual/relationship determinants
  - Belief in rigid gender roles and identities, weak support for gender equality
  - Masculine orientation/sex of entitlement
  - Male dominance and control of wealth in relationships

- Community & organisational determinants
  - Culturally-specific norms regarding gender and sexuality
  - Masculine peer & organisational cultures

- Societal determinants
  - Institutional & cultural support for, or weak sanctions against, gender inequality and/or gender roles

KEY CONTRIBUTING FACTORS AND THEMES FOR ACTION

PROMOTING NON-VIOLENT NORMS / REDUCING THE EFFECTS OF PRIOR EXPOSURE TO VIOLENCE

- Individual/relationship contributors
  - Artificial support for violence against women
  - Witnessing or experiencing family violence as a child
  - Exposure to other forms of interpersonal or collective violence
  - Use and acceptance of violence as a means of resolving interpersonal disputes

- Community & organisational contributors
  - Neighbourhood, peer & organisational cultures which either enable or support or have weak sanctions against violence
  - Community or peer violence

- Societal contributors
  - Approval of, or weak sanctions against, violence against women
  - Stereotypes condoning violence as a means of settling interpersonal, civic or political disputes
  - Colonisation

IMPROVING ACCESS TO RESOURCES AND SYSTEMS OF SUPPORT

- Individual/relationship contributors
  - Social isolation and limited access to systems of support
  - Income, education, occupation
  - Relative lack of status
  - Alcohol and illicit drug use
  - Poor parenting
  - Personality character traits and poor mental health
  - Relationship and marital conflict
  - Divorce/separation

- Community & organisational contributors
  - Weak social connections and social cohesion and limited collective activity among women
  - Strong support for the privacy of the family
  - Neighbourhood characteristics (service infrastructure, unemployment, poverty, collective efficacy)

- Societal contributors
  - Support for the privacy and autonomy of the family
  - Unequal distribution of material resources (e.g., employment, education)

POPULATION GROUPS AND PREVENTATIVE ACTIONS

- Preventive actions
  - Research, monitoring and evaluation
  - Direct service delivery programs
  - Organisational and workforce development

- Population groups
  - Children
  - Young people
  - Women and men
  - Neighbourhoods affected by disadvantage

SETTINGS AND SECTORS FOR ACTION

- Community services
- Corporate
- Faith communities
- Education
- Workplaces
- Cultural institutions & networks
- Arts
- Sports and recreation
- Media & popular culture
- Local government
- Health
- Cyberspace / new technologies
- Justice
- Academic
- Military-led institutions

INTERMEDIATE OUTCOMES

- Individual/relationship
  - Improved connectedness to resources and support
  - Respectful and equitable gender relations
  - Improved attitudes toward gender equality, gender roles and violence against women
  - Improved skills in non-violent means of resolving interpersonal conflict
  - Responsible alcohol use

- Organisational
  - Organisations that:
    - Model, promote and facilitate equal, respectful and non-violent gender relations
    - Work in partnerships across sectors to address violence
    - Implement evidence-based violence prevention activities
    - Are accessible to and safe and supportive for women

- Community
  - Environments that:
    - Value and support norms which are non-violent and build respectful and equitable gender relations
    - Build connections between people and between them and sources of formal and informal support
    - Take action to address violence

- Societal
  - A society in which there are strong legislative and regulatory frameworks and appropriate resource allocation for supporting:
    - Gender equity
    - The prevention and prohibition of violence against women (e.g., in advertising)
    - The development of healthy relationships between men and women

LONG-TERM BENEFITS

- Individual/relationship
  - Reduced violence-related mental health problems & mortality
  - Improved intimate skills & family & gender relations
  - Reduced intergenerational transmission of violence and its impacts

- Organisational
  - Violence prevention resources and activities integrated across sectors and settings
  - Organisations that value and promote respectful gender relations
  - Improved access to resources and systems of support

- Community
  - Communities that value gender equity and respectful relationships between men and women
  - Reduced social isolation and improved community connections

- Societal
  - Reduced gender inequality
  - Improved quality of life for men and women
  - Reduced levels of violence against women
  - Improved productivity

Preventing Violence against Women and their Children in the Frankston-Mornington Peninsula Catchment: Mapping Report

Women’s Health in the South East has collated information on initiatives and practices across the Frankston/Mornington Peninsula catchment that prevents violence against women and their children.

This mapping exercise* is intended to increase opportunities for collaboration by providing information on what is happening in the region and where there are current gaps in preventing violence against women and their children to inform future work particularly for the catchment wide strategy. It also aims to improve the sharing of information between partners, and improve referral of clients to appropriate services.

Initiatives and practices have been allocated to three categories of prevention which are: primary, secondary and tertiary as described earlier. Information has been checked with services and is correct to the best of WHISE’s knowledge as at 23 September 2014.

There are currently no ongoing primary prevention initiatives or practices that were identified that solely service the Frankston/Mornington Peninsula catchment. A small number of primary prevention initiatives were identified which serviced either all of the Southern Metropolitan Region (SMR) or were Victorian wide initiatives. These included programs that promote equal and respectful relationships and gender equality.

The majority of initiatives or practices that solely service the Frankston/Mornington Peninsula catchment, or focus on the whole SMR or Victoria, were classified as secondary prevention of violence against women and their children. These included awareness raising campaigns such as White Ribbon Day, counselling for women who may be at risk of violence and behaviour change programs for men.

Many of the initiatives or practices that solely service the Frankston/Mornington Peninsula catchment, or the whole of the SMR or Victoria, were classified as tertiary prevention of violence against women and their children. These included crisis centres, emergency housing as well as Victoria Police responses.
As evident in the mapping of family violence services, there is a lack of primary prevention of violence against women and their children initiatives at a local, regional and state-wide level for the Frankston/Mornington Peninsula catchment.

*The full mapping report is available in appendix 2

Organisational Assessment Tool

An organisation assessment tool was completed by 6 out of the 7 working group member agencies. With permission from the original developers and owners, Women’s Health in the North (WHIN), the organisational assessment tool was used to establish current organisational approaches to the prevention of violence against women and their children. The organisational assessment tool covered 5 key areas in the prevention of violence against women and their children:

- Organisational commitment
- Workplace culture and leadership
- Professional development and training
- Partnerships and collaboration
- Services, programs and practices

The results of the organisational assessment tool were then collated and key themes drawn out to inform actions specific to the Frankston - Mornington Peninsula catchment. Three themes emerged as requiring specific attention within this strategy and associated action plan:

- Organisational policies and procedures
- Organisational and workforce development
- Communications and social marketing

The results also provided a clear indication that many of the actions that were needed to be addressed fell within the organisation/workplace setting. Given this information, one of the key settings for action will be organisations and workplaces as we strongly believe that change needs to occur within, as well as more broadly. Workplaces are well placed to recognise local issues and influence broader social change by being leaders within their community.
Other key settings for actions within this strategy align with the ecological model and include settings within the society and individual domains.

Taking a settings based approach ensures that people are reached where they live, work and play and that actions can be tailored to meet the needs of specific population groups (Australian Women’s Health Network 2014).

A set of key preventative actions have also been established and are in line with the findings of the organisational assessment tool. These actions include:

- Community strengthening
  - This aims to enable and support communities to address violence against women and their children and the social norms that make it acceptable (VicHealth 2007).

- Organisational and workforce development
  - Organisations and organisational cultures have a powerful role in influencing the behaviours of individuals and groups and so can play a role in violence prevention by modelling non-violent, equitable and respectful gender relations. Workforce development involves building the skills of relevant workforces to implement primary prevention activity either informally and opportunistically or at a more formal level (VicHealth 2007).

- Communications, social marketing and advocacy
  - Communications and the media can be used in a range of ways and platforms to raise awareness of violence against women and their children and address attitudes, behaviours and social norms that contribute to this problem. This action will coincide with advocacy which involves building collective activity to raise awareness of the issue of violence against women and their children and to encourage governments, organisations and communities to take action on factors contributing to the problem (VicHealth 2007).
Prevention actions

Goal

To create a community that is safe and accessible for all women and their children.

Objectives

- By 2017, organisations will form stronger partnerships across sectors and settings within the Frankston/Mornington Peninsula catchment, to collectively address the determinants of violence against women and their children; namely gender inequity and male privilege.

- By 2017, organisations who have signed the Statement of Intent will have increased their understanding of primary prevention approaches to violence against women and their children and be working towards actions that promote equal and respectful relationships within their workplace.

- By 2017, the community within the Frankston/Mornington Peninsula catchment will have greater representation within the prevention of violence against women and their children space and will have the capacity to take appropriate action to prevent violence against women and their children within their community.

Monitoring and Evaluation of Strategy

The working group, in conjunction with the Prevention and Better Health Alliance, has overall responsibility for overseeing the implementation of the strategy and associated action plan.

The strategy and action plan will be evaluated and reviewed on an annual basis. Evaluation will take into consideration an ecological approach where outcomes for society, organisation and individual are all considered.

| Ongoing involvement and/or support of the Peninsula Model’s Preventing Violence against Women and their Children working group. | One staff member who attends the working group meeting and provides updates to the working group of progress within the organisation. |
| Ensure that all communications regarding violence against women and their children have a focus on gender equity. | Organisations introduce or adapt communication strategies to reflect the inclusion of gender equity. Organisations begin to use gender equity in all correspondence regarding violence against women and their children. |
